

Treatments That Don't Completely Heal Hemorrhoids

Hemorrhoids, also called "Piles", are basically inflamed blood vessels or tissues inside the rectum or the rectum. Thousands or even millions of people have problems with this condition. The market offers plenty of hemorrhoid treatment available in order to ease the hot, uncomfortable and itchy feeling that hemorrhoids cause. But the treatments won't cure this, it will only ease this. Here are the treatments that do not completely heal hemorrhoids:

Creams and Ointments

This is the most popular type of hemorrhoid treatment. It is applied on the outer part of a person's rectal area and it tries to ease the blood vessels. Due to this, the tissue is relaxed and it will not excessively bulge out. When the tissue is no longer herniated, it's less likely for the hemorrhoid to flare up. This kind of treatment is effective and it will relieve the pain for the mean time, but the cream or even ointment has decided to wear off and also the flaring up of the hemorrhoids will recur.

Suppositories

Suppositories are also one of the most popular types of hemorrhoid remedies. A suppository is a small plug of medication inserted in the anus in order to give moisture to the hemorrhoid, which creates a lubricating effect to ease the next rectal pressure. Its purpose is to guarantee that the hemorrhoid is delivered around without being ruptured again. It works well for a lot of, but not for the others.

Here is another hemorrhoid treatment which is used to constrict the vein tissues with the intention that the hemorrhoid will be less vulnerable to problems. Using pills to treat hemorrhoids has its benefits, but beware of the side effects that this might cause.

The 3 Remedies Stated Earlier are Usually the Most Popular Hemorrhoid Treatments

But when a person who is affected with this condition gets tired of using all of the abovementioned treatments, or when a person reaches the point where he or she gets a severe case of hemorrhoids, you may still find choices like cryotherapy or surgery. Although, it's not practical since the costs are way more expensive than creams, pills, and suppositories. Plus, the relief will only be shortrun.
