What people refer to as piles are actually inflamed hemorrhoids. The inflammation causes discomfort during bowel movement. However, if there is blood in your stool, this suggests that you may have ruptured your piles. Since fresh blood is pumped to this structure straight from the heart, the flow of blood is much more intense. People may become anemic due the loss of blood.

For Mild Cases of Rupture, It can be Treated With Topical Creams and Ointments

These products help heal the shatter and reduce the inflammation. For severe cases, surgery may be the best alternative. Many procedures remove the piles through cutting it off, or cutting off it's blood supply so it dries up. Even some people who are afflicted by mild to reasonable bleeding resort to surgery because it is the fastest way to deal with the condition. However, the procedure will be painful and costly.

Is Also Important to Note that There are Two Types- Internal and External

This is mainly classified depending on their location. Internal hemorrhoids are located further up into the rectum and you won't be able to see these, except if they enlarge to the point that they stick out the anus. Often, inside ones cannot be felt because they are affected by visceral nervousness, which do not transmit pain. External hemorrhoids tend to be the ones that people usually see and they are much more painful. Both of these can be ruptured and cause bleeding but it is observed more often with inner cases. If you are not aware that you have piles, blood in your stool is a sign that you may have internal piles.

One way to check if the blood in your stool is from bleeding hemorrhoids is from its color. If it is bright red, it could mean that it came from your piles. Everyone has hemorrhoids and they act as padding for the anal sphincter, the muscles in charge of moving the stool along. They're filled with blood vessels and also they help aid in a stool movement. These types of blood vessels receive oxygenated blood, therefore the bright red blood, as opposed to the dark red color of the deoxygenated blood. If the blood in your stool is dark red, it may mean that the bleeding is actually coming from further up the anal canal or from other parts of your body.

Stress diet constipation and diarrhea are all causes of hemorrhoids causing you increase the strain or press while you are having a bowel movement. Once you enhance your internal pressure to be able to push you are also increasing your internal stress on the blood vessels gets near your rectum. When that internal pressure brings about the vessels in order to bulge it is called a hemorrhoid and they are very painful with common symptoms of itching swelling and bleeding.
